Project Description

You can help stop piracy in Africa. We would like you to analyze data recorded by the International Maritime Bureau and other online databases to track where pirates are operating on the African coast. Your research will help United States Africa Command better understand the piracy problems in Africa and inform operational decisions at the command. This project requires analysis of the data to develop a visualization (maps) of the piracy problems in Africa (East and West), and an associated report, to include research on current and historic attempts, attacks, and presence of other maritime traffic including local commercial ships and military vessels. We are looking for a motivated, independent virtual student intern that will follow the data to determine keen insights to the problem.
